Visualizing the Great War will detail the frontline and homefront imagery created during and after World War I, including works by the Futurists, German Dadaists, Franz Marc, Käthe Kollwitz, Otto Dix, George Grosz, and many others whose response to the conflict was often oppositional to the prevailing and recurring war fever.

Linda McGreevy is Professor Emerita at Old Dominion University. She retired after thirty-four years in the University’s art department, where she taught an inclusive history of modern art from the late nineteenth century through the end of the twentieth century, and served as Chair. She is the author of numerous articles and the book Bitter Witness: Otto Dix and the Great War (2001). Her forthcoming book, Käthe Kollwitz: The Woman Watching Who Feels Everything, is a biography of the German printmaker and sculptress.
