Cecelia Tucker’s recollections about the Lambert’s Point Summer Program from Part 2 of her oral history interview in 2009

... And the other thing I did was to put together a summer program for the children who live over there. They don’t have any structured activity during the summer and no real facilities except for the Larchmont Rec. Center across the street over here which is really just inadequate but it’s some place that they can go. And so it’s an academic program and it is recreational. And it is free to those kids from grades 4 thru 9. The Rec. program we run in cooperation with Norfolk Parks and Rec. and therefore kids can come through my program and go to that program which is an all-day recreation program. And they used to go swimming, but the swimming pool that we used here on the campus, they closed it down. But they’d go on field trips and they have little games and arts and crafts and that sort of thing.

The summer program... the Lambert’s Point summer program still goes on to this day. And as I said we have an academic program which is reading and computer literacy.

[Regarding who teaches in the academic program:]

Over time it has changed. We’ve had college professors. We’ve had Norfolk High School teachers. As a matter of fact, Pat White who’s one of the Norfolk 17 taught in the program. She taught advanced biology one summer. We’ve had graduate students from Old Dominion. So it has over time had a variety of backgrounds teaching those kids, but it has always to my mind been very important that the students see African Americans in that role on campus. And so where I’ve been able to I’ve tried to do that. I’ve tried to hire them. But this summer coming up we’re gonna do something different, and we have two graduate students from the Darden College and they are going to do reading differently. They’re going to approach it differently. And it’s an exciting opportunity for the kids as well as for the graduate students and so we’ll see how that goes. But we also provide basketball camps; you know where the kids get to live on the campus for a week. And another very exciting program for the kids is the Sea Camp which is run by the Oceanography Department. And that’s where the kids go out to the various waters and pick up specimens and examine those and learn about their habitat and all that sort of thing.

[Regarding to whom these programs are open:]

Just the Lambert’s Point kids. We get some Park Place kids, but we also... and this was the thought of Dr. Koch. I have to credit him with this. The dependents of our hourly and classified employees, and I want you to know that they are a very important part of this. They want every summer for their kids to be involved in these programs because one, they know it’s a structured program and the kids are right here with them. It’s free and it’s good. And so those are the kids who are in that--those programs. So we’ve done that and we’ve worked with the Larchmont and I had better stop here and go back because another very important part I’ve left out with the summer program that Dr. Koch also helped put together... we talked to Norfolk Southern. They’re also a neighbor. And Dr. Koch had said to me, “You know, they--they’re neighbors and we ought to get them involved and so they have endowed a scholarship so students who go through this program in any phase – whether it’s just recreation, whether it’s academic or whatever – as long as they have been in a program, when they have finished high school they can apply to Old Dominion University. And if they have all the other credentials that are required and there is a need, we provide two scholarships per year. So that, that over a period of years has been very good it--it’s been difficult getting these kids through though. I’ll have to tell you that. But nevertheless I think over a period of time we have graduated about five kids from the Lambert’s Point Summer Program.

Full March 13, 2009 interview:

http://dc.lib.odu.edu/cdm/compoundobject/collection/oralhistory/id/593