The modern world can feel like a whirlwind of chaos, with its fast pace, constant connectivity, and daily struggles. It's easy to feel overwhelmed by current events, especially when it comes to discussing them with family, friends, colleagues, and associates.

Unfortunately, our society is fueled by discourse that has caused division, making it more important than ever to bring our whole selves into our workspaces, classrooms, and communities. Communication is the key to breaking down these barriers and building understanding, respect, and collaboration. Not only is it a moral imperative, but it is also a practical solution for creating stronger, more innovative, and harmonious communities, workplaces, and societies.

To facilitate inclusive conversations, it's crucial to prioritize dialogue over debate. In this issue, we'll explore the differences between dialogue and debate, and provide you with helpful tips for holding inclusive conversations.
Debate is oppositional. It affirms one's own point of view and creates a closed mind-set. Winning is the goal. Debate causes critique of the others position. Debate implies a conclusion.

Dialogue is collaborative. It allows for two or more sides to work together. Dialogue works to find common ground. Dialogue causes introspection and calls for temporarily suspending one's own beliefs. Remains open-ended.

PERSONAL HABITS FOR INCLUSIVE COMMUNICATION

Prioritize Active Listening: Active listening avoids evaluating, judging, labeling, or giving advice. Instead, it includes the following:

- Asking open-ended questions
- Summarizing and clarifying
- Stating your perception of the speaker’s questions and statements.

Engage in Consistent Self Reflection: Fostering inclusive communication requires that we examine our readiness to engage in the conversation. Ask yourself the following questions:

- Who am I?
- What don’t I know about you?
- What don’t you know about me?
- How do I engage my cultural other?

Address Your Own Unconscious Bias: Unconscious bias refers to the attitudes or stereotypes that affect our understanding, actions, and decisions in an unconscious manner.

- What pop-ups do you have when you walk into a space?
- What assumptions might you be making about others? What might they be assuming about you?

Acknowledge the Differences Between Dialogue and Debate.

Remember, dialogue takes practice! We were not all born with the skills to communicate effectively. The more you practice, the more capable you become.
As an expert in economic policy and having spent a career developing strategies for organizations and campaigns that won changes to improve the lives of millions, McGhee's powerful anecdotes, enriched with data and historical fact, told a story of what we lose when we buy into the zero-sum paradigm, or the idea that progress for some must come at the expense of others. “History shows up in your wallet through wealth,” noted McGhee during her keynote.

The Sum of Us follows Heather McGhee on a cross-country journey as she explores the origins of economic inequality in America. Along the way she meets many people who confide in her about losing their homes, their dreams, and their shot at better jobs to the toxic mix of American racism and greed. Despite this, McGhee offers hope and an empathetic view into a multicultural America.

During the Q & A portion of the evening, Heather McGhee drilled home her theory of Solidarity Dividends— or the benefits we gain when people come together across race to accomplish what we simply can't do on our own—as she answered questions from the audience. She also provided tips on increasing our capacities as change agents.

Heather McGhee was hosted by the Office of Institutional Equity and Diversity as part of our CommUNITY Conversations series, held in conjunction with the Monarch Task Force for Inclusive Excellence and Sentara Healthcare's Employee Resource Groups. OIED Celebrates Indigenous Peoples Day

Indigenous peoples have thrived in North America since time immemorial, building vibrant and diverse cultures-safeguarding land, language, spirit, knowledge, and tradition across generations.

In Virginia, Indigenous communities still thrive and work hard to spread awareness about their tribes and to educate people about the challenges of Native Americans past and present.

In October, members of the office were invited to WHRO to celebrate Indigenous Peoples Day, where Dr. Sheila Elliott, member of the Nottaway Indian Tribe, gave a presentation on the history of the Nottaways in Virginia, their journey to state recognition, and the importance of art within their culture.

National Endowment for the Arts: Big Read Grant

ODU's Office of Institutional Equity and Diversity seeks to obtain funding from the National Endowment for the Arts through "The Big Read" initiative. This project offers a unique opportunity to bring the campus and surrounding community together by participating in shared reading experience, programming, and activities centered on a particular book.

If you're interested in collaborating with the Office of Institutional Equity and Diversity or would like more information, please contact Dr. Millicent Lee, Coordinator for Diversity and Inclusive Excellence at mdlee@odu.edu.
