ODU's Project I-Hear Topples Barriers to Health Care, Trains Future Professionals

No one could stop talking about the little boy who came through for his first school physical.

It was Aug. 2, and the Old Dominion University Primary Care Clinic at ODU Virginia Beach was conducting a school physicals and health screenings clinic. The boy had been in the country only a short time and didn't speak much English, but he clearly had a great time. Visiting the stations, he met Big Blue, collected stickers and excitedly learned English words. Oh, and melted a few hearts.

The clinic was part of Project I-Hear, an effort by ODU students and faculty from multiple disciplines to change the landscape in health care services. Carolyn Rutledge, director of the University's doctor of nursing practice program, said one of the goals of the project is to learn more about the disparities and barriers to health care in this region.

"Patients move here with no medical record, but schools and sports require a physical," she said. "There's no free clinic in Virginia Beach, so our clinic meets that unmet need for many patients. It also provides pediatric experience to our students. And it's fun! The hospital is not always a happy place, so this is a unique experience for the students, too."

Barbara Kraj Delivers More than 60 Pairs of Children's Shoes to Ukrainian Refugees in Poland

Barbara Kraj, program director for medical laboratory sciences, visits her parents in Gliwice, Poland every summer. This year's trip looked a little different.

The crisis in Ukraine began in February, and support from Poland began immediately. The people of Gliwice made a concerted effort to help Ukrainian businesses, and the city opened a support center in an arena where supplies could be donated and refugees could get what they needed.

Kraj's parents regularly donated supplies to the center. One day in April, while dropping off hygiene supplies, Kraj's mother, Jolanta, overheard Ukrainian refugee parents talking about their children outgrowing the shoes they arrived in.

This need tugged at Kraj's heartstrings, and she asked faculty and staff in the College of Health Sciences if they would like to donate children's shoes for her to take with her on her trip. Her limit was 30 pairs, owing to the size of her luggage.

Kudos Corner

Dr. James Blando

ODU is full of talented, humble people. Jim Blando, PhD, the interim chair for the School of Community & Environmental Health, is one of them because he learned from, "tremendous people who were so humble."

His humble beginnings include Sicilian immigrant grandparents who worked in factories. His grandmother lost her hearing due to the working conditions, which sparked his interest in environmental health.
